In Visual Studio 2005 I can precompile to release another large file. Can this same functionality be extended to an attached SSD or, if pre-compilation is not possible, can a secondary HDD be used for this purpose. An example of the pre-compilation that I'm interested in is compiling a SQL Server Compact database. A: For VS2005, I am using the SSD with a Local Settings\User Files\Microsoft Visual Studio*\VirtualStore*\Data Cache, and that folder is kind of the automatic folder that goes back to a virtual application that used to be present when VS2005 was installed. You can use the default share for the SSD drive, and then it will use it as an alternate location to store all the cached files (and not only the ones that have been explicitly precompiled). This virtual application is named CustomVSCacheVHD. It contains a cache of your settings files (or "deterministic" files). Additional info : My SSD is in a virtual machine, so I can access it like a physical disk. You can do the same using a physical machine. The folders used to store Visual Studio cache are a real disk partition or a partition in your SSD (I don't know about other IDE IDE like Eclipse/Netbeans). Lloyd J. Becket Lloyd J.
