* Easy to use * Automatically resizes all pictures * Add multiple pictures at once * Backup original images * Optimized for x86 * Installation tutorial available Visit link for full review I love it and use it everyday. The interface is pretty clean and easy to use. I've found other programs that were more annoying but this one's easy and the interface is pretty basic. If I need to do some serious resizing I'll use a better program, but this one's good enough for most needs. Eitbit Picture Resize Review It is a good program that can help you to enhance your pictures. It has many useful functions that you can use. It can resize

Control Visual Studio LightSwitch Apps with Client-Server-AoA "The control enables developers to build rich, offline-capable client applications for the Microsoft.NET Framework" - Source: www.qualit-it.de/lightswitch Answered By: Daniel Sanchez Replied By: Daniel Sanchez Date: 05/29/2013 Also available on the Windows Store! If you have feedback about this answer, please let us know. Related Questions I have recently attempted to enable a phone number integration feature for our clients in our enterprise app, I believe the process is going smoothly for most users, but I am having a few issues. I have been given a phone number that is... You have an Excel spreadsheet for which you want to store the data using a computerized process. What is the best way to go about it? (Yes, I am a sys admin and no, I do not have a budget for this project!) I need to create a multi-screen project which involves menu functionality, but this menu will be outside of the main screen. How do I implement this? Specifically, what controls should I use? I've tried several things and cannot get the items to move... I want to add data to a table that has repeating data from another table. I have two tables, table A and table B. Table B has a row, column for table A. A sample row of table B looks like this: sku | location | quantity 1 | APPLE | 25 1 | BANANA | 100 In the cell I want to replace the data with the data from table A, but its not working. I tried using this: =VLOOKUP($A1;A:B;2;FALSE) but this is not doing it. A: Your VLOOKUP function expects a value from a different worksheet; not a value from a different table in the same worksheet. You should use INDEX and MATCH instead. So you could use

=INDEX(TableA;MATCH(B1;TableB;0)) where TableA and TableB are the table names and the column names in which you want to look up. Q: Creating a file input using a DataTable I'm using ASP.NET and VB.NET. I need to create a form that accepts user input for a text file and store that file (similar to the way the Visual Studio accepts files in Project->Add New Item) My problem is that I'm using a DataTable (for file names) and not a GridView. Is it possible to create a FileUpload.aspx with a DataTable? A: I don't think it is
