A gift from above A gift from above By Ed Stoddard It was the last night of reading Richard Dawkins' "The God Delusion." At the end, a tearful woman stood up and asked him to pray for her. She had a problem. She'd been to church with her family and had accepted Jesus into her life, but she wasn't sure she was a Christian. She'd been to a number of churches and she just didn't know which one was right. She was a little afraid, she said. She'd felt pressured at times and didn't feel comfortable with the message of many of the churches she'd been to. She'd felt a little like a leper and didn't know what to do. Dawkins had been moved by her statement, but there was little he could do except try to communicate the way he believed God talked to him. Theologians would say he was using the first person in a particular way, but Dawkins didn't think that mattered. It was a heart-rending moment. You could tell Dawkins cared about the woman, and that he wanted to help her. I don't mean to suggest that he had no other responses he could have given, but the exchange came off as genuine. That was over a year ago, and it still makes me think about it. On the

System Requirements For AutoCAD:

This mod is compatible with ANY game that can run a savestate. It does require some skill though, as it can run into problems if the game doesn't behave correctly. Version 1.5.1 - Added the file in the Resources section so that you can run with the same version as the official release. Version 1.4 - The smart controller config options have now been separated out into two files. One, "controller" now just has some options for the Steam Controller to let you use the DualShock 4. Nothing else is in here.
