I really liked the green. We used to have picnics in the park and had barbecues, and one time I went with John and my parents and our kids, and I remember getting hungry and we went over and ate a hamburger right out there in the park. It wasn't fancy; we ate with our hands off the picnic table. I really liked that. I got to have fun with my dad. But back to Pat: Her name was Patricia, and she was a sophomore in high school in the class I taught, and she was super-cute. She had a round beautiful face. She would sit in my class sometimes and I'd walk up to her and ask her what her name was and she wouldn't have any idea, but she was gorgeous. She's really big on the fast food and the TV dinners; she's like a junk food junkie. I'd like to get ahold of her and say, "Patricia, you know, you're awfully pretty. You've got the cutest face." I liked her a lot. She'd just go with the flow; she had such a happy way about her. She'd be friendly to everybody —super-friendly—and she'd be nice to me at the same time. But that wouldn't be going out of her way; she'd just be nice. She had this great way of being, and then, you know, I'd look at this picture and she'd be off some place, and I'd say, "Where's Pat?" I'd be asking everyone and she'd be like, "I don't know." My feelings: She's really pretty and she's really nice. When she was in my class she was always smiling and had a nice way about her. I used to ask her what it was like to go to high school and she'd say it wasn't too bad.
