Usman Khwaja House The Usman Khwaja House is a small house located on the eastern edge of Islamabad, Pakistan. History According to the National Accountability Bureau, the house was built by senior bureaucrat Mian Ikhtiar ul Haq in his wife's honor and in honor of the couple's two sons and five grandchildren. The house was originally located in the middle of an Indian garden. The National Accountability Bureau's forensics department stated that a boot print, cigarette butts, a spent cartridge, and another boot print were found in and around the house. Former interior minister, Chaudhry Perwaiz Elahi, was also arrested on the premises on February 14, 2011. The house was attacked on January 15, 2011. On January 23, 2011, the house's owner, Zohra Khwaja, who lives in Karachi, received a call from Ikhtiar ul Haq stating that the house was "totally destroyed," but had nothing to do with the planned gas pipeline. It is a big change from the usual food in the walls of M.T. Anderson. But it all depends on what you like of course.... :o) I do enjoy my breakfasts here but they do not have an extensive menu, so I am just not sure about your suggestion about them. Maybe a different location? Of course you are right about the breakfast... almost all of the food is kind of the same. It is, however, a great place to go after a day of shopping
