Let's say I have a 1GB serial number file to process using my computer. My computer has 100% of its processing power for this. I use ascii files to build my command line argument(arguments), split them into args and run the code with them. Which of the following two methods would be more effective and why? Method 1: 100% of the time, my computer would just take it and when it finishes, it would give feedback. - Method 2: 1) I parse the file into a list of arguments. 2) Process the file using my computer 3) Process the rest of the arguements. I understand that method 2 will not be as efficient and will be very slow compared to method 1. But if I'm going to have a very huge collection (like say 10k) of arguments is method 2 better or is method 1 more preferable? A: The answer is B, 100% of the time. Unless the algorithm you are using to parse the serial numbers uses at least in theory an exponential amount of time, your memory (1 GB) is always a bottleneck. Method 2 takes time to perform the split but, since you have a very big problem, the CPU time is very small compared to the memory usage. In order to tell which method is better, you need to know how much time is spent by your algorithm.
