In a case of acute epiglottic entrapment, successful cricothyroidotomy was performed to remove the mass from the hypopharynx, establish an airway and facilitate effective inflation of a tracheal tube and ventilation of the patient. A case report. A 23-year-old male patient with subglottic stenosis and a history of cocaine abuse presented with acute onset of dysphagia and choking sensations. Epiglottic entrapment was confirmed by rigid laryngoscopy. A cricothyroidotomy was successfully performed by using a right-handed digital "i" incision. Tracheal intubation with a 6-mm cuffed uncuffed tube was performed to aid ventilation and to establish an airway; placement of a gastric tube allowed for decompression of the neck, epiglottis and hypopharynx. After 2 days, the gastric tube was removed and a nasogastric tube was placed in the esophagus. After 3 days of fiber-optic intubation, the nasogastric tube was removed; on postoperative day 11, oral feeding was initiated. The nasogastric tube was removed after one week, and at 9-months follow-up, the patient was able to return to his baseline activity level.Q: Using the Google Maps API: Smooth UTM to latitude/longitude conversion? If I have a UTM long/lat I'm trying to convert it to a latitude/longitude and vice versa. Google offers a simple Web Service for this (which seems to be pretty accurate but not great (sometimes off by a lot). Is there a library that offers some more accurate conversion? A: There is also another apis that is in beta that can work. You just need to add 'beta' in your callback 3e33713323
