ZymoGenetics, Inc. (NASDAQ: ZYMO) today announced that a study published in the January 2008 edition of the journal BioMed Central shows that grape seed extract (GSE) may help fight the oxidative damage caused by free radicals. "Cellulite affects the body at a cellular level by causing capillary compression and subsequent disorganization of the collagen and elastin fibers that give firmness to skin," said Sarah K. Barrios, Ph.D., Chief Science Officer for ZymoGenetics, Inc. "GSE can help maintain healthy skin by decreasing the effects of oxidative damage by free radicals," continued Barrios. "We are excited about the use of GSE in cellulite management and expect it to be very popular among women who are concerned about the appearance of their skin." The treatment results from Dr. Barrios' study demonstrate the promise of GSE for improving the texture and appearance of cellulite. However, future clinical studies are needed to confirm the specific clinical benefits of GSE. GSE is a concentrated, highly standardized, antioxidant-rich extract derived from whole grape seeds. GSE has been shown to be safe when used in adult humans and animals at recommended doses. It has been extensively tested in humans for absorption and potential bioavailability of its major components. No serious adverse reactions have been observed. About ZymoGenetics, Inc.
