Want to change the timestamp or modify the EXIF data of many images at once? This freeware is exactly what you're looking for. Change the age or modify the timestamp of many images You must simply add all the images you want to process. The app will organize them by the date or by the number of images in the group. Click on the "image group" to begin. You will have the opportunity to select all the images by touching the 'select all' button, or to pick your favorite ones. You can edit the date and time of all the selected images or just mark them for a syncing. This is done by simply moving the 'select items' cursor on an image. You can also set the difference between two timestamps. This can be done simply by double-tapping on an image. This feature is very useful if you want to easily share the pictures with the people you are meeting. It's also great to use it to synchronize the total number of photos for each group. Rename the images, adjust the size or update the EXIF data Once the selected images are set for the processing, a window appears and encloses the options that will be shown after the conversion is completed. You can move the image in the collection by dragging it. You will also see the size and the file name. You can also change the type of the image, the file name and the EXIF information. misbehaving, here are the most common issues that it could be. Printer problem: Single-color printouts A printer with these problems tends to provide a single color of paper for printing. If you see that your printer has a single color only, it means that the problem in the printer is either a defective head or a problem with the tubes. The head will change the color of the printout as it moves from one position to another. If you see a problem in this case, you'll have to send your printer to be fixed. If your printer is working fine, the tubes could be clogged. Printer problem: Lack of printouts A printer with these problems might not print anything. The latest OS is the most over complicated/ annoying OS to interact with. There's too much going on in the OS. Click to expand... Agreed. I only use Apple products because they're better than all other alternatives hands down. Then again, we're talking about a company whose naming scheme revolved around "Post", "Aperture" and "iPhoto". Aperture's whole purpose was to provide a centralized way to organize your pictures. iPhoto was never the biggest problem... it simply opened your pictures without taking advantage of the full resolution of your camera's sensor. This doesn't mean that every photo management app should open the whole raw files, but the OS simply needed to support something. Aperture could have been a much better product if Apple had applied iOS conventions. Like the Camera Roll. On iOS, the Camera Roll isn't a slide show, it's a showcase of your best photos. The camera app automatically creates a big image that can be zoomed and it automatically selects all your photos taken with the same lens. Instead, you get the Aperture look where you have to manually grab all your photos, strip the EXIF info, add a caption, set the resolution and then rotate the shoot. It's a pain in the ass. I think they could have been much better with a much smaller team. Just the few people in the Developer's Relations department was a curse because Apple decided to make each "expert" have an opinion on the consumer. Nobody has ever been able to provide a blanket rule on what is best for consumers. As a professional I hate Apple products. I've used them for 11 years but the whole ecosystem is absolutely horrible.
