[2] It is not clear whether the "reasonable modification" required by the Act should be defined by reference to the standard of the regulations promulgated by the Department of Justice, 28 C.F.R. § 36.301, or by reference to state law. It does not matter here, however, because the ADA regulations and the Maine Human Rights Act do not provide for such a reasonable modification requirement. [3] Contrary to defendants' argument, this conclusion does not render the administrative complaints inapplicable to the current action because, under Maine law, a complaint filed with the MCAD is a prerequisite to a complaint filed with the federal Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. See 5 M.R.S.A. § 4651(1) (West Supp.1998). [4] Defendants also argue that genuine issues of material fact exist as to whether plaintiffs had knowledge of the alleged job posting. This argument is without merit. First, plaintiffs' attorney notified defendants of the alleged post in her letter to them on March 22, 1998. Second, the record is replete with evidence that plaintiffs did, in fact, see the job posting. Plaintiffs have submitted numerous affidavits and deposition testimony detailing their discovery of the job posting in the various department offices. Plaintiffs have also submitted several documents indicating that they were aware of the post and have relied upon it in their decision to apply for various positions. Finally, defendants admit that the job posting was in fact in
