The authors present a case of successful lumbar spinal reconstruction using autogenous iliac crest bone after laminoplasty. This lumbar spine reconstruction was performed in a 72-year-old male patient who had prior compression fractures at multiple levels. Laminoplasty was performed at T12 and L2. The iliac crest bone graft was placed under the concave side of the cranial lamina. The authors used stainless steel plates to stabilize the restored lumbar spine. The bone graft was reorganized and reattached to the cranial and caudal laminae without the formation of a pseudoarthrosis at the bone grafted site. The bone graft has been incorporated at the cranial and caudal laminae. The patient had a good postoperative course without any neurological deficit. Lumbar flexible laminoplasty using autogenous iliac crest bone graft is a good option to treat a central lumbar spondylolisthesis with a large defect in the lamina.Diversion devices and injectable agents for the treatment of drug abuse. Drug abuse is a major public health problem in the United States. Treatment with opioid agonists is an effective approach for many patients, but there is room for improvement. One such improvement is drug replacement or substitution in the treatment of opioid dependence. Opioid agonists are 595f342e71
