Read our full review for the full details, but in a nutshell, Elements is a best-in-class alternative to Photoshop. There's a reason that some of the world's most successful companies operate in the world of professional design: it can be a lot of work to produce something from scratch. On top of that, sometimes you just want a quicker, cheaper way of producing a high-quality image or image-based asset that you can use in a professional setting. When you're creating images, there are two general uses: the first is when you're editing something that you're adding to an existing online project, and the second is when you're designing something entirely for yourself. For the latter, it's just easier to edit images in a way that you're familiar with. But when you're editing for the first type of project, you need something that's faster to edit, easier to use and simpler than Photoshop. There are many excellent free alternatives to Photoshop for these purposes. But for the prosumer to professional user, there's an alternative that really makes the most of the Photoshop toolbox – Elements. In this guide, we'll take a look at everything you need to know about Elements and help you decide if it's right for you. What's in Elements? If you're a Photoshop user, then you know what Photoshop is all about. It's a very powerful image editing tool, and Adobe have taken a lot of care to make it faster to use and more intuitive. Elements on the other hand is much simpler to use and the interface is stripped back to what it should be – nothing more, nothing less. It doesn't handle layers, for example, and if you want to do more than stick a square on top of another, you'll need Photoshop instead. That said, you won't need any advanced Photoshop techniques to edit images in Elements: you can do everything that you need to do, but you won't get much more for your money than what you do get with Photoshop. What's New in Adobe Photoshop Elements 2019? In case you hadn't noticed, we haven't been reviewing Elements since 2017 and the latest version of Photoshop, PSM7, 05a79cecff

APPLYING IN THE MODERN WORLD:
Maternity Cover APPLYING IN THE MODERN

WORLD: Maternity Cover Today at Juho, Jasmine and I are discussing how to apply for maternity cover in the modern world. We talk about how you can move insurance cover off a parents carer. We talk about what employer's policies are in this space. And why we believe it's important for you to have maternity cover in your line of work, even if you are having a child or haven't decided if you are going to. It's a little bit of a journey. If that's your thing, join us!

Jasmine and I go through the steps of applying for maternity cover via an employer. We talk about how employer's pricing can differ but also when you need to ask for cover and when you don't need to. And we go through how we determined our employer's pricing and how we calculate our own. I share some of my experiences of having a baby in the workplace. Some stories of how I managed being off work. And how I saw managing my own coverage through APH. But also going into the business of maternity cover, learning about the pros and cons of one, two or three month maternity cover, and how to price your offer depending on the maternity plan available to your employee. This episode is part of a run of episodes I am producing for Juho. I love the video series and I can't wait for you to have a listen. I can't promise they will all be Metrolight (travelling exhibition) Metrolight was a travelling exhibition and series of events curated by the Museum of Liverpool. It toured England and Ireland from 2005 to 2007 in what was described as a "cultural journey". The exhibition brought together materials from the collections of the museum relating to Liverpool's relationship with rail and the railways, and explored Liverpool's suburban and regional railways. Metrolight was the first exhibition of its kind in the UK, and the first to travel exclusively on public transport. The museum commissioned artists to paint illustrations for each of the 60 stations visited by Metrolight. The illustrations, which were designed and painted by new and emerging artists, were produced in response to themes chosen by local residents and visitors to Liverpool's Paddington and Lime Street stations. They were funded by a £1.5m grant from the Heritage Lottery Fund. The exhibition coincided with the launch of the museum's new online visitors' guide, which was the first time the railway had featured in a national visitors' guide. The guide was produced in association with the Strategic Rail Authority (SRA) and the Railway Heritage Society.
