You can only copy or move files to or from the folder where your protected files are stored. * Warning: The default time to exclude the program from protection is 24 hours. Always make sure that the "Protect for all users" function is selected. * Warning: The space occupied by protected files cannot be resized or altered while the program is in operation. (However, you can freely modify the protected files by leaving the program disabled.) * Warning: The program can't protect files bigger than 4 GB. * Warning: All protected files are registered in a folder of your choice and are not removed after they have been used. This is a security measure that protects the program if it is not shut down properly. * Warning: The program deletes its own files in the same way as other programs, and you can't cancel this operation. You can use the "Backup files" function to save a copy of your protected files. * Warning: The program does not cover information related to your external hard drive. The EXE data is not backed up when saving the protected files. *

While the vast majority of users are probably fine with the default settings, Windows 10 brings up a nice security screen every time you open a protected file. This is especially easy to miss, and you might sometimes forget that the program has locked your files, and let you use them without a problem. Locking your files is something we all really need to look into before allowing the file to run in the first place, because you don't always know if the settings from the program are similar to the settings that you see in the desktop.
