Surface enrichment of plasticizers on paper surfaces can significantly influence the drying and printability of aqueous thermal paper after the application of plasticizer solutions. In addition, plasticizer enrichment on the paper's surface can influence the drying behavior of coated and uncoated thermal paper. The present study focused on the fate of three commercial plasticizers (bis (2-ethylhexyl) adipate, bis (2-ethylhexyl) sebacate, and tri(2-ethylhexyl) trimellitate) after their application to uncoated thermal paper. It was found that all three plasticizers were able to penetrate into the surface of the paper and could be found there in both coated and uncoated thermal paper as high as 25 mg/m². The enrichment of plasticizers on the thermal paper surface was found to have a critical effect on the surface drying of both coated and uncoated thermal papers.
