Articad Pro 14 Telemedicine Gurgon Technically, it is possible to do a telemedicine consultation from anywhere in the world, but there are some conditions. For a successful teleconsultation, there should be no obstacles to an instant (broad) connection. But, if you are connecting from a Gurgon location, you are still unlikely to get a successful teleconsultation from any international location. There are many imponderables that make this more challenging. Global Disaster Planning Global disasters are more common than you think. A rising and restless world population and a rapidly changing weather pattern create an environment for more frequent and greater intensity of storms, floods, tornadoes, earthquakes, droughts, and hurricanes. When the weather changes, so do the people in surrounding areas. Traditionally, events such as these create massive refugee crises, but increasingly there is a mass exodus for secondary communities, where people try to get to a safe haven while minimizing exposure to the early symptoms of the disaster. The amount of time it takes to receive and respond to a disaster in a remote location may be considerable. Telemedicine is one way to support a major disaster response and avoid the potentially significant delays and associated health risks that may occur during transportation to a health facility. Challenges The following
