The photoinduced dimerization of bases plays an important role in many photochemical reactions. It is in general understood that the photochemical pathway goes through an excited state that contains a Coulombic interaction between two bases. Several examples of dimerization induced by energy transfer processes have also been reported. In this contribution, we show that in a different system, the base pairing, a supramolecular energy transfer process occurring between two guanine bases involved 1cdb36666d

To explore the disease genotype of a Chinese family with an autosomal dominant Eulala disease. All individuals of the family were tested for disease genotype. Nontranscribed exons of the ELN gene were amplified by polymerase chain reaction. Sequence analyses of the amplified fragment were done directly. The database GenBank was searched to analyze and classify the mutation. A 1-base pair deletion was detected in exon 9 of the gene (c.2170delC). This mutation was predicted to result in the deletion of 73 amino acids (aas) in codon 774, (p.Ala774Thrfs[AAA]X). This deletion was highly conserved and identified as novel. A novel mutation of the ELN gene was detected in a Chinese family with the autosomal dominant Eulala disease. The benefits and risks of ergogenic aids and substances. As the use of ergogenic aids and substances continues to increase, so does the incidence of adverse effects ranging from mild to severe in nature. This review will briefly describe the literature describing ergogenic aids and substances, including caffeine, beta-hydroxy-beta-methylbutyrate (HMB), and creatine. A PubMed search was performed to identify articles relevant to ergogenic aids and substances. Doses and adverse events have been reported as they relate to the age of the subject and type of ergogenic aid/substance. Adverse events can be categorized as mild to severe and can range from gastrointestinal, cardiovascular, neurological, or renal events. A substance or ergogenic aid can be classified as a stimulant, ancillary effect, or enhancer. Ancillary effects include increased rates of fluid retention, tachycardia, and insomnia. Enhancers have the potential to increase the intensity of training, however, they are not approved by the US Food and Drug Administration. On the other hand, stimulants that promote acute performance have not been shown to negatively affect neurocognitive function, sleep patterns, or body temperature. Uncovering the mechanisms underlying the potential harms of ergogenic aids and substances will help to mitigate their use. In addition, the use of allergenic cosmetics, such as skin products, should be screened for prior to use. $\square \diamondsuit$
