The risk of poisoning by polypharmacy (defined as the oral administration of > or = 5 drugs, without any of them considered as principal in the definition of polymedicated patients) is known to be higher in elderly than in other patients but the evaluation of the risk of poisoning in polymedicated elderly is still poorly known. The aim of this study was to identify the factors related to polypharmacy, its impact and its safety in older patients. Retrospective, observational study of medical records of non-urgent stays over a period of one year at the ward of geriatrics of the geriatric teaching hospital of Toulouse, France. Data were collected from clinical and pharmaceutical records and analysed with respect to admission and discharge dates, admission and discharge diagnosis, admission and discharge orders and diagnosis codes, among others. A total of 741 patients who were admitted between January and December 1999 were included, 86 of whom were readmitted for a second stay. At the end of the study, 176 patients had died. Polypharmacy was significantly associated with adverse events (mortality, discharge against medical advice) and, to a lesser extent, with a risk of falls (OR = 2.39, p 75 years
