England can become the first FA Women's Super League team to win the competition - Manchester City were beaten in the final in 2011 - but will have to overcome Toni Duggan, who scored twice for the Scots. The British sides were guaranteed a place in the final after the semifinal matches were settled by penalties. The quarter-finals were decided after Germany beat Finland 3-0 at the Olympiastadion in Berlin to book their place in the decider. The German national team won the Uefa Women's Euro in 1991, a year after they had defeated the then world champions United States to win the title, and they also won the European Championship in France in 1975. The last time Germany and England met in a major international tournament, their men's teams faced each other for the World Cup in 2006. Germany won that game 2-0, with Mario Goetze scoring a hat-trick and Miroslav Klose netting the other goal. England can also win the Champions League trophy in Budapest on May 8 - if they beat Germany. Scotland, who will be up against Germany in the return league match at Lovell Stadium next Sunday, have never won a major Uefa tournament but enjoy better home form than England, with three wins and three draws from their six matches at the Tier One women's home nations league. Germany have lost their last four league matches 1cdb36666d
