Hi fellow programmers. I'm a heavy web app developer and I have quite a lot of experience. I've been learning Python programming for a while and I love it. But unfortunately, they teach programming and coding in general in this language at the University. In the past I've always written web apps in PHP, but that's about it. The reason I'm switching to Python is because of the non-linear way you learn programming. When I learned Python, I did it in a non-linear way. I started by reading a book about it, moved on to Codecademy and then moved on to some video-based tutorials. I moved on to the "Programming for me" page and it was the official way of learning. I was following tutorials in YouTube and doing exercises on my own, switching between the programming languages I wanted to learn at the time. This way of learning, as I mentioned before, I found to be a lot more enjoyable and intuitive. This is only one of the reasons why I'm switching. After I get a chance to start my studies again and go through University, I've been thinking about doing my project in Python and would ideally start with a short D3.js script to give me an idea of the kind of way the programming world works. I'm sure there will be a lot of things I don't get and will have to learn along the way. I know it's a pretty ambitious starting point but I want to try to see how well I can program in the non-linear way I learned Python. I'm sure it's going to be a great experience and I've been learning the non-linear way of programming for a long time now. I'm not sure about programming languages. I started with C++ and once I moved on to Python, I stopped learning C++ and only learned Python. I've been doing some basic Java programming, but it's not a program
