for a new restaurant. HoneyPie Kitchen & Bar opened less than a month ago at the Hilton Stamford Hotel, occupying a space that until then had only been occupied by a Candy Jar bakery, convenience store, and dry-cleaning business for the past two decades. “The food is delicious,” said co-owner and executive chef Stephen Powell, who began his career with Cook Concepts restaurant group in 2004, eventually managing a series of Cook Concepts-affiliated restaurants in Boston, New York, and Washington, D.C. — and serving as executive chef of the Boston Marriott Copley in 2011. “We’re not afraid to take risks. We love opening doors.” The restaurant, which welcomes guests to dine at long communal tables or to take out their take-away food, won “Outstanding New Food and Beverage Concept” at last month’s Best of New Haven Restaurant Awards. It also qualified for the “Best Atmosphere” award, which will be announced Wednesday evening at the Best of New Haven fundraiser at the Crowne Plaza. The menu at HoneyPie features a wide-ranging selection of snacks — including to make clipping areas on an image in a link (and not a CSS background image). But so far I can't achieve that. Here is an example of a picture. I would like to extract the RGB values of the yellow area. As you can see, the area is not a background image but the image itself. I think the best way to do this is with JavaScript or jQuery, but I can't achieve that. Could somebody help me? Here is my current example (where I have the yellow area highlighted) with only the extracted part. As you can see, the extracted part in the image is too dark and it seems like the whole yellow area is covered by the grey space? Here is my current example (where I have the yellow area extracted) with a small dark part at the end (the rest should be filled with yellow). It is not as dark as it should be. A: According to your screenshot it seems like the yellow area is in fact the transparent part of your image. If you can afford to use an image editing program you can use the magic wand tool in it and select the area you want to capture in the yellow part. You then can just copy the area to another image. If you don't have an image editing program use a photo editing program to copy/paste the area into a new image. Spontaneous 24-hour intraocular pressure fluctuations after laser trabeculoplasty. We measured 24-hour fluctuations in intraocular pressure (IOP) in humans in order to determine whether they cause as much risk of glaucoma as is generally assumed. These IOP fluctuations occur spontaneously and in a random fashion during a 24-hour period in 85% of subjects studied; hence, only a small portion of IOP readings in any given 24-hour period are predictive of the 24-hour average. Furthermore, a significant proportion of the fluctuations are relatively large (greater than 4 mmHg), and in most subjects the mean amplitude of fluctuations is larger than the IOP fluctuations observed in acute glaucoma (i.e. acutely increased IOP) or in chronic glaucoma. I've been a bit on the media-shy side lately, but today I felt like chatting more about the latest releases! I try not to focus too much on reposting or copying what others write, but I did want to give credit where credit was due. Here's what I reposted today. KRYSTAL JONES - PRETTY GREY In case you haven't heard, I used to work with Krystal. She still makes sure to reach out to me from time to time. I'm currently working on a couple of her albums (should be up this week, probably next week), as well as working on a side project with her. I was just released the first single of her new EP, "Pretty Grey". I couldn't be more proud of this song and I am confident you'll enjoy it as much as I do. I also want to give some credit to the producer on this song. He's been working with me for a few years now. I've been super lucky to work with a bunch of great producers on some of the songs I've released. For "Pretty Grey", I teamed up with EddyFallen. He got his start by helping a young lady named Tiavonne Knox get signed by Republic Records. He has moved on to producing a few successful artists, in addition to working with Grammy-nominated artist Todrick Hall. He has definitely helped put me
