virus (HIV) in the community, we conducted a randomized, double-blind, placebo-controlled trial of hepatitis B vaccine. We enrolled HIV-seronegative adults who were residents of San Francisco, Baltimore, and New Orleans. Of 5,642 enrolled persons, 4,876 (90 percent) were eligible, enrolled, and retained in the trial. Two hundred eighty-seven of 1,183 subjects randomly assigned to receive hepatitis B vaccine and 127 of 985 subjects randomly assigned to receive placebo became infected with HIV. The ratio of infection rates was 0.84 (95 percent confidence interval, 0.73 to 0.96;  $P=0.007$ ), but when subjects were seropositive for hepatitis B surface antigen (HbsAg) at enrollment, the ratio of infection rates was 0.29 (95 percent confidence interval, 0.10 to 0.84;  $P=0.02$ ). This vaccine trial suggests that hepatitis B vaccine reduces the risk of HIV infection in HIV-seronegative persons and that the protective effect is stronger in persons seropositive for HbsAg.
