If possible, how do I go about doing this? I'm specifically looking at this snippet for an AWS::CodeBuild::Project::Maven. block: - name: "create service package for" include: "../..../templates/venv.ops.sh" when: - "test_pipeline_name == 'Nakadi-build' and errors.0 == 'Maven'" loop: "{{ cpus | size }}" The errors array is in the aws_codebuild_project resource, and this specific terraform snippet ends up in the create_service_package.tf configuration. This is a snippet of the code for the error, it's a placeholder for the actual error message that I want to call: custom_errors: - message: "Could not find '{{ service_package_name }}' service package" error: "Could not find '{{ service_package_name }}' service package" A: You can store any arguments in the metadata array for the resource itself and include them into the error message using source_location: ... error: - message: "Could not find '{{ service

Extracting zip files To extract the contents of zip files, you need a tool like WinZip which is available for free at the link below. WinZip 19.00 Notes Use in an external editor Many editors support.sln-files. You could try opening the.sln-file in your favorite editor. Though it is not recommended to edit the.sln-file directly because the.sln-file might be switched off in the next release cycle. If you're happy for the editor to modify the.sln-file (like using indentation, etc.) you can consider opening the.sln-file directly. Alternative methods While extracting a zip file, it is also possible to use the uncompressed version. Usage as a batch file You can execute.bat-files directly from a command line or a shell. Importance The source format is no more supported by modern version of VS2019 and it is very unlikely to be supported by future versions.
