He did not want to post his complaint on the message board, so I am doing this. This collector only bid on a set, has a 4-5 point number of the same figure and was upset when he found out there was already an auction up at the price that he was going to bid. He knew there was another auction and when I pulled my item and it was removed from the lot, he immediately wanted his money back!! I am disappointed. Wow. I would expect a seller to ask a buyer to place a bid immediately. Seems odd that a "4-5 point number of the same figure" has to be outbid. Sounds like greed. I would say, to be fair to you, you should have received a refund. I think you should keep things in perspective. You were put in a tough spot, playing catch up with someone else who had a 4-5 point number of the same figure. If he wanted to see that figure sold at a higher price, he had the option to withdraw his bid and immediately place his, perhaps at a lower price, so that his desired figure remained in the auction. You were under no obligation to play catch up with him and the only thing that you were put under an obligation to do was to honor the sale and let it stand. The auctioneer is not the only one to blame for the problem. You are also to blame. I think you should keep things in perspective. Show HN: Pou - a PouFile player with a minimalistic interface - amingilani ===== cagenut I'm no audio expert, but when I saw the Eterm Dark mode suggestion in the main settings my first thought was that it was probably gonna make the audio just audible over each other. I could then hear the audio, but it wasn't pretty. On the other hand it sounded like it was fixed so I clicked it and started listening. Since it has an audible background noise, it's cool that there's a switch to turn it off (I guess you could make the switch not even be a switch). So then I clicked replay, and started in the right time, and it sounded like that was after an audible background noise, but before the start of the song - the (oversampled) audio was the same too! You need to explicitly set the start and end timestamps of the song in the HTML to what you actually want to play. I'm not sure what the fullness of the poufile format spec actually means.
