A: For sure some visual modification are made, but you can force a solution by using the -x switch to noisylabs: -x Output generated by noisylabs. The idea is similar to the -b switch, but instead of having all the noise you only get part of it. Here's a sample where I've used -x: Input: Input.jpg Output: Output.jpg Notes: Since noisylabs does not support -b, this solution only works for -x. Noisylabs will not support -b. This will not work if the size of the image is too big for the display you use. Folding chairs are well known in the art and are generally used for watching television in the home or while travelling in a vehicle. Typically, the folding chair has a seat and a backrest which is pivotally attached to the seat. The folding chair is supported by wheels for enabling the folding chair to be moved from one location to another. When the folding chair is not in use the wheels are retracted within a housing. A problem associated with folding chairs of the type described above is that it is difficult to insert a substantial load into the chair. Because the wheels are supported at the base of the seat and backrest, if a substantial weight is placed on the seat of the chair, the weight is transferred directly to the wheels through the housing. This causes a very large, sudden force to be applied to the wheels when the chair is moved from one location to another. This forces the wheels to jam or lock and makes the folding chair very difficult to move.The U.S. Navy is testing a new laser to bring down incoming missiles — and it may be better equipped than a smartphone for the task. The LPI-25A Laser Weapon System uses a compact laser beam produced by a room-sized array of xenon-ion lasers. The laser is mounted on the nose of an aircraft like an infrared missile or a cruise missile, pointed toward the ground at the target. The device was tested at White Sands Missile Range in New Mexico on Aug. 16, and the Navy said the system is designed to operate at speeds of up to Mach 4, or four times the speed of sound. The goal is to keep the system light-weight to fit on a ship, and this testing was performed with one such system.
