Bowser Library The Bowser Library is a library in Watertown, Wisconsin, United States. It was added to the National Register of Historic Places in 2003. History The library was built in 1907, replacing an earlier library in use since 1905. At that time, the collection consisted of 1,800 books, the library was staffed by one librarian, three assistants, and one night librarian. The library served the public until 1962, when its collection was moved to a new library in downtown Watertown, the Library of the University of Wisconsin–Milwaukee. The then-library director, John F. Bowser, had begun working to gather support for a new library in Watertown in 1929. The project was approved in 1947. Bowser left the library in 1949 to work for the state Department of Public Instruction. Without the new library's construction, the library collection was moved to the basement of the old post office in Watertown. The library basement reopened in 1962. Bowser died in 1957, and according to the post office where he worked, "He saved the post office from financial ruin and was a tower of strength to many postal workers." The library building was added to the National Register of Historic Places on April 18, 2003, and the building now houses the Watertown-Region Business Association. Library The library is a one-story, wood-frame structure with clapboard siding, American Craftsman style. It was designed by local architect Louis Kirchner. The building is topped with a gabled roof with rafters, and corner brackets. The rectangular, three-bay front facade has a projecting gable with a round window on its front gable above. A gabled front porch runs the length of the front. The windows are lited with narrow glazing, and are topped with narrow metal ridge caps. The front entry door has a transom with a shallow hood. A wooden, two-story addition extends from the rear of the library. An archway from the rear of the addition connects to the library.
