There are some useful functions you can use to directly serialize (into json, xml, or csv) a string[]. Instead of serializing a string[], you can also serialize a serialize a variant[]. A: Edit This answer was written before the OP requested a performance benchmark. Looking at a more modern implementation from Stack Overflow, I have updated this answer to reflect the new benchmark results. See also @anthonyhugh's answer. RICHARD RUSSWITZ'S ANSWER is still the fastest variant.

Original Answer Here is a general function that will convert string[] to any type. It may not be the most efficient, because it iterates over the collection twice, once for each type. But it will probably be fast enough for most application logic.

function Serialize(const Source: TType; const TargetType: TType; const Index1, Index2: Integer): TType; begin Result := Default(TargetType); case TargetType of TType[Index1, Index2]: Result := Source; TType: Result := Source; TType(Any): Result := Source; end; end; Usage: function Serialize(Source: TType; TargetType: TType; const Index1, Index2: Integer): TType; begin Result := Default(TargetType); case TargetType of TType[Index1, Index2]: Result := Source; TType: Result := Source; TType(Any): Result := Source; end; end; Example: function Serialize(const Source: TType; const TargetType: TType; const Index1, Index2: Integer): TType; begin Result := Default(TargetType); case TargetType of TType[Index1, Index2]: Result := Source; TType: Result := Source; TType(Any):
