Here is his response: "I am a proud Raven. I am proud to call this my hometown and I am proud to have the opportunity to bring a championship to a city that needs one. I am excited and honored to call this my home but I am also happy that I can finish my career in a place that I love. The Ravens are the pinnacle of football, especially when you are playing in the AFC North. They are one of the best organizations in all of sports. I have been a fan of the organization for years, so I am excited to continue playing for the team that has the greatest fans. I am extremely happy and excited to be here and I can't wait for the season to start." What have you thought of Mark? He has good speed and is athletic, but he also reminds me of Tomlinson in the way he runs. He seems like a tough, hard-nosed player who loves playing in this great city and surrounding area. He also seems like an excellent teammate. It's easy to see why he is so popular in the locker room. Mark played in the

I can't find a difference in meaning or usage between "einen aktiven/entlastenden Standpunkt" and "einen aktiven/entlastenden Standpunkt zu." I also can't find a difference in their usage on website forums, so can anybody tell me if there is a difference? A: The English synonym to entlastenden / entlastenden is "prescriptive". I use this term for behaviour that puts an unrealistic burden on the other party. A "prescriptive" outlook would make sense if you are the state, and your citizens are citizens of your country. If you are the state and your citizens are persons with a passport,
