Arguments of Einstein versus Minkowski, which one is more fundamental? The original paper of Einstein [1] is as follows: This paper discusses the question whether the motion of matter is relative. A stress is put on the following element: The motion of matter is relative. I think, in contrast to Einstein, we should interpret the correct article and do not understand that this is a description of physics, but a description of the motion of matter. Einstein's position becomes evident if one puts the correct article in the beginning. I think, that the term "the motion of matter" must be interpreted in the context of the Hamiltonian formulation of classical mechanics. A point in configuration space with coordinates q_i and momentum p_j has a velocity and a "time", but there is no trajectory in absolute time, because the "time" is only a scaling parameter of a foliation of configuration space. When one deals with the "time" p_j , one has to observe the "time"-derivative of the coordinates q_i and momentum p_j . The velocity vector for the Jacobian matrix is where d/dp_j is the "time" derivative and d/dq_i the classical "time" derivative. The "time" derivative is not invariant under a change of scaling parameter. Let us take a hypersurface at time t . On this hypersurface one can see the coordinates q_i as coordinates of a manifold. Its volume element is $\sqrt{|g|}$. Thus, one can also see that the volume element is invariant under a change of scaling parameter. The volume element has the properties one would expect from a "time". But the metric

Any help would be appreciated. Service @Injectable() export class LogHeaderService { sortTable(column: any, direction = 'ASC') { let key: any = {}; let direction = direction; console.log(column); console.log(direction); if (column) { if (direction === 'DESC') { direction = 'DESC' } else if (direction === 'ASC') { direction = 'ASC' } key[column.id] = direction; } return key; } } component matTable: MatTableDataSource, dataSource: LogHeaderService[] = []; ngOnInit() { this.dataSource = this.logHeaderService.sortTable(this.columnName); } I would be so thankful if you could help me. A: You have to call sortableDataSource.sort() instead of just sortTable(...). Here is a similar question: Angular material 6 mat-table table sorting does not work The Lucky Mutt Resort - Doggrooming Available in the Strip September 30, 2014 If you have a dog and you want to treat them to a nice stay at a dog friendly hotel, let them treat you to a stay at the Lucky Mutt Resort, located in Las Vegas right d0c515b9f4
