The present invention relates to a method of making lithium cobalt oxide powder suitable for making a positive electrode active material of a non-aqueous electrolyte secondary batteries, In the field of secondary batteries, mainly used are secondary batteries using a material capable of absorbing and desorbing lithium ions as an active material for a positive electrode. Examples of such a material are lithium-containing transition metal oxides for a positive electrode material are generally composed of crystalline particles or amorphous particles or methods of making such crystalline particles or amorphous particles include, for example, a method of preparing a target material having a desired composition in a molten state, there is generally known a solid-state reaction method for preparing a target material by heating a compound of a desired composition in a crucible to prepare a desired target material in the form of a compound containing a desired element and subsequently pulverizing the compound. However, this method has a problem that the compound tends to lose its composition. Further, since the pulverized compound generally causes pulverization damage of the composition, even if a target material having a desired composition can be obtained, the target material
