When Haley took over as the Chiefs' coach in the off-season, he was barely a glint in the eye of Chiefs owner Clark Hunt. Fans were uninterested. The team was in the midst of a 4-12 season and Hunt was intent on retaining his general manager, Scott Pioli. Haley had never been a head coach. He lacked Hunt's connections in New York and owned an NFL head coaching record of 0-7. But he was hired largely because of his reputation as a strategist. He was seen as an expert in coming up with a scheme, then devising a game plan to fit it. That may be exactly what the Chiefs need now. For the last seven seasons, they've been owned by a coach who is a more traditional offensive coach. Romeo Crennel is a quarterbacks coach first, but he is also a big play coordinator - a fact that has been revealed early in the season. But now Crennel's days may be numbered. He could be removed at the end of the season - replaced by his offensive coordinator, ala 1999. It's not unusual for a rookie head coach to have an offensive coordinator who is also his guy. With the Miami Dolphins, Tony Sparano and his quarterbacks coach, Dan Henning, were so tight that he ended up as head coach. It may be an even better fit for the Chiefs. Chiefs offensive coordinator Al Saunders and his quarterback guru, Bob Bratkowski, are very close. Bratkowski was Saunders' quarterbacks coach in Minnesota. It's worth noting that the next couple of seasons could be some of the most important of Kansas City's current regime. The Chiefs are expected to reach the playoffs in the coming year. But a run in the
