Q: How to write a RegExp to match URLs? I need a RegExp to match URLs in java. I've tried using the following expression: [\w-]+://[\w-]+ Which matches for example my localhost: but it doesn't match: If i change the second part of the expression to ^http\:// then this works, so that makes me think that for some reason i can't match for the port. Why is this happening? A: Why do you need the expression at all? You can simply do: Pattern p = Pattern.compile("^http\\://(.)$"); Matcher m = p.matcher(url); if (m.matches()) {... } Note: if you don't need to support URLs containing multiple protocol types in the same location, then you can simplify the expression to: Pattern p = Pattern.compile("^http:\\/\\/(.)$"); Regex is not always the best tool to use, but if you need to validate a single input you want the above. A: I found out the answer. There is a character restriction on port numbers. I couldn't verify this though. Q: How to make apt-get update transparently use proxy? I'm setting up a proxy and when I run apt-get update from the terminal I get the following output: Ign:3 xenial InRelease Hit:4 xenial InRelease Hit:5 xenial InRelease Fetched 1,707 kB in 1s (1,162 kB/s) Reading package lists... Missions Consultants International (M.I.)

Missions Consultants International (M.I.) was founded in June 1987 by Bruce Carlson. Its inaugural board of directors included the following: Bruce Carlson, Bob Bouwhuis, Jack Hammitt, David Maxwell, Jim Summers, and Paul Barber. It was incorporated in the State of Washington and was headquartered in Burbank, California. M.I. provided a consulting service to Christian ministries in the U.S. and abroad. It offered research and evaluation services, with special emphasis on strategic direction, missions communication, mission leadership and finances. It also facilitated conferences and meetings for missions leaders and churches. In February 1988 the Executive Director was Bob Bouwhuis. In July 1989, David Maxwell resigned as Executive Director and the board approved the placement of M.I. under the leadership of Bruce Carlson. At the same time, Carlson took over as Executive Director and commenced a new four-year term. In May 1990, Bob Bouwhuis resigned as Chair of the board and was replaced by Jack Hammitt. Carlson was also appointed to the position of Chair. In June 1990, Marvin Mackie was appointed as Executive Director and Carson Saul was appointed as Executive Secretary. At that time, the Board also decided to remove "consulting" from the company name and to embrace its ministries as its primary focus. M.I. International was formed in June 1990. On April 13, 1989, the missionaries from the United Church of Canada launched the largest flight by an airborne mission team ever made. The 12-day trip took the team to five different countries, to more than 100 churches and mission stations and to over 25 million people. The team traveled in five different airplanes, covering over 2,000 miles on 55,000 miles of fuel. The missionaries spent time in the Dominican Republic, Guatemala, Mexico, the United States and Puerto Rico. The members of the team slept in house churches and mission stations, toured missions and preached. The previous decade of missions had been filled with tiring travel in small planes and in rain-soaked jungles. The aircraft chosen for this trip were large aircraft, which also allowed for the team to spend more time in each destination. M.I. International assisted a number of ministries as they launched new missions programs. The goal was to assist in the formulation of strategies and to plan and direct the development of programs. As M.I. International's clients developed new missions strategies, many would include
