In the field of the electrical control of machines, such as, e.g., of motor vehicles, the electrical control is carried out both on the electric circuit board of the control device and on the electric circuit board of the machine. In this context, for the purpose of carrying out the electrical tests of the electrical control and also for the purpose of the routine maintenance and also for the purpose of the preparatory work, the electrical circuit boards and also the electrical control devices are fastened on the machine by means of test fixtures, and they are tested. The purpose of the test connectors, which are mounted on the test fixture, of the sockets that are connected to the test fixture and of the plug connectors that are connected to the electric circuit boards, is to allow the electrical test of the circuit boards and the electrical control devices by means of an external electric test device. The test fixture itself holds the circuit board and also the electric control device firmly in place. It is furthermore known that the test connectors and the sockets, which are mounted on the test fixture, are connected to each other by a screw that is inserted
