Disk Drill Pro Crack Full Activation Code Downloading from internet.A visibly upset Jon Stewart on Friday tore into the Obama administration, saying the Department of Homeland Security had bungled the president's response to the Benghazi attack. ADVERTISEMENT "This is a screwup of monumental proportions," said Stewart, host of "The Daily Show." "Yet there's no one in this administration who could be held accountable." Stewart's scathing remarks came after CNN on Friday said that a former Navy SEAL was "told the White House did not give explicit authorization to get U.S. boots on the ground in Libya," a development Stewart said was "confounding." "What does that mean? If a SEAL has boots on the ground, how is that not U.S. boots on the ground?" Stewart said. "By the authority of the ambassador?" "Wouldn't that mean that Obama was planning the event in advance?" Stewart asked. CNN reported that during the attack, the former SEAL "was trained by the State Department to be on the ground; he was trained to extract the ambassador. The intelligence the SEALs was receiving was that a U.S. ambassador had been killed." The former SEAL told CNN that he did not receive explicit approval for the mission from the White House. Stewart used the administration's own words to repeat the message. "I think the most important take away here is not who's fault it is that there's a bit of a debacle here," Stewart said. "It's not the CIA, it's not contractors. And it's not any of the State Department. It's not a lot of Obama administration in general." "It's the president." "That's who screwed up," Stewart added. "The burden of accountability rests not with the people

7-11-2017, 06:16 PM Number of Downloads: 24010 . Industry experts say the change in oil prices will affect the outcome of the Canadian election. Now, nearly one and half years away from the election, time is running out for all parties to introduce their platforms to voters, particularly the prime minister's rivals. Sources tell The Canadian Press that Stephen Harper's political team is trying to shut out a competing party, possibly the Bloc Quebecois, from running in the next election. He's also trying to contain the NDP's rise and promote his party as the "sole real alternative." NDP Leader Jack Layton has been able to define his party's message with a series of policies and programs, such as the economy and a universal pharmacare program. A source says Harper's campaign team has had a "quiet discussion" with Quebecois leaders that the federal election will be a Harper-led majority. According to a report last year in the Globe and Mail, Harper's campaign team is aiming for a Liberal-NDP or Liberal-Bloc partnership to ensure the PM's return. This would require the support of the Bloc to defeat the Conservative candidate, but the Bloc's leader would not rule out the option of supporting the other party — if such a tie-up was not against its pro-sovereignty stance. However, the Bloc is telling people, "All options are on the table for the election in six months." If the Conservatives win a majority, the party has a "safe" riding majority in Quebec in a safe riding for the next few elections. If the Bloc Quebecois wins more seats and takes the balance of power, the Conservatives could be forced to consider a deal with the Bloc to stay in power. Another report in the Globe and Mail says senior Conservatives were watching the U.S. presidential election closely and seeing what works and what doesn't in the 2010 ballot that sent Republican Bob Dole to the White House. The internal report says the former prime minister is a "key political player" that the Conservatives have to watch carefully. It says Dole has a "soul for politics" and would be a formidable opponent against the opposition Liberals in any election he ran against the Conservative party. "In a weird way, he could be a deal-making kingmaker because he's so much bigger than his own party and he's a guy 1cdb36666d
