The assessment of "HyperMotion" in Fifa 22 Cracked Version gameplay begins with a rigid CPU opponent facing the player, and the AI must behave and play exactly as a human would. Players can then move to a "live-player" setting, which is using the actual player from the game, and the game will be simulated with "hyper-accurate" animation. This allows the game to be tested with player-specific animations, such as tackling styles and movement on the ball. Additionally, a "visual-only" setting is available, which will only enable the player's graphics, animations, clothing and player appearance without any performance captures. In the lead-up to release, we conducted the following research with the team in order to discover more about each mode, and player. Live Player: What is the performance impact when using real players? In order to test performance with EA Sports' real-life player, we recorded a full game with a CPU opponent using the "visual-only" setting. The CPU opponent had all animations and game logic running, allowing us to see the framerate of the real-life player with minimal interference. The CPU opponent was then manually swapped with the "live player" to see the performance impact of using the actual player in the game. Global Ranks The results of this research may surprise you. The live player level gives the same or better framerate than the CPU in numerous scenarios. The major conclusion is that the use of the real-life player has a negligible performance impact on both CPU and live player setups. This is an area where the developers were able to make really subtle changes to make the player react to the environment around it. The player has a more natural sense of what is going on around it, which is a feeling of realism that we are all familiar with. AI Tackling Next, the team conducted two studies to look at the effects of using the live player on AI control. These were conducted using both different variations of CPU opponents and using the live-player system as a control. The first AI study focused on replays for attacking situations - making a run into the penalty area. Players pass the ball into the middle of the pitch, before breaking into the box. The CPU opponent was unable to control the pace of the attacking play, allowing the team to record the impact on

What's new in Fifa 22:

- Authentic Ball Physics

Ball physics rely heavily on player collisions, and in particular on interactions between opposing players and the ball itself. EA has gone one step further by including player collisions with real-world descriptions, so you know for certain when your opponent is trying to clear the ball. Unique to FIFA games before, we've implemented this behaviour as part of all our physics engine layers, so everything in the game plays according to the real rules. A unique Ball Physics Engine has also been developed for the new FIFA game engine and it allows for more realistic forces acting on the ball. This allows the ball to behave more realistically which is believed to improve the quality of the feeling with the ball.

An authentic football world:

Every team is built and customized to have a unique look and feel based on real clubs and real players.

New player models will have more natural, agile movements, more human-like facial features as well as diverse body shapes to allow the player to be more expressive and to display the kind of every day influences that shape their outside and inside lives. The collective AI and coaching systems have been improved to help make each team play more tactically.

- Choose an authentic load out. Find out what your favourite players go to wear, what they wear underneath.
- Develop your football skills, improve your dribbling and shooting ability. You can also perform with your friends in online multiplayer.
