How would you change the data type of a column of data from double to decimal in a SSIS script task? A: To change the type in a dataflow, you need to use a derived column transformation. This lets you change the data type at a point in your flow. If you want to change it in an output column (perhaps an error column), then you need to use a script task. A: Based on the answer by @Richard Foster, just to summarize: You can create a derived column in the same script, and with that you can change the column type to be Decimal data type. Q: Why is 16-bit unsigned integer not used for time? Why is it that 16-bit unsigned integer is not used for time? I believe the 32-bit integer used for time comes at higher cost (more bandwidth). Are there any concerns that we have to worry about with the 64-bit integer? A: Why is it that 16-bit unsigned integer is not used for time? Because we don't need the space or bandwidth. If you want to store the time in memory, and you don't have 16 bits to waste on the extra load of a single byte, then why do you want to do that? If you're talking about keeping it in the registers, then I don't think that having the less common 2's complement variant is really any problem, and in fact it
