I'm creating a jquery plugin that adds classes to html elements if they are available in the page. I need this to be user friendly so i'm planning on hiding the classes themselves. Something like this: some text If this is available on the page, i will end up with: some text If this is not available on the page, then i will end up with: some text This makes sense to me. I'm attempting to use $.ajax() to test for the availability of these classes but it seems like I'm doing something wrong... Here's my test function: function $(selector){ var classes = ""; for (var i=0; i
