Business) Warren Buffett is a little more bullish about Bitcoin. Buffett, arguably the world's best investor, has allocated about $36 million to BitPay, a cryptocurrency payment processor backed by Goldman Sachs and PNC, according to regulatory filings. The investment, which closed in late March, is a notable one because it represents the largest deal for a single crypto deal reported by a US company. On March 31, Buffett's Berkshire Hathaway filed an S-1 for a new holding, a "special purpose acquisition company," created by his holding company, Berkshire Hathaway Inc. "Berkshire Hathaway Inc. also acquired a number of securities from BitPay and created a new class of preferred shares of Berkshire Hathaway Inc. equal in number to the securities to be acquired," the filing states.
The reason Buffett made the investment is so he could avoid "the risk and turmoil associated with cryptocurrency," according to a filing this week from Divya Singh, an assistant treasurer for the company. "Mr. Buffett has made investment in Bitcoin and many other cryptocurrencies. His holdings of cryptocurrencies have evolved, and he continues to evaluate all publicly traded cryptocurrencies and the technology supporting them," she said. Bitcoin, the world's largest philhealthrf1formexcelformatzip WASHINGTON - A new D.C. law takes effect on Tuesday that changes where police officers can pull you over for a broken taillight. In August, D.C.'s police chief announced new guidelines to clarify when and where officers can pull you over for a broken taillight. The new rules limited the number of times a single officer can pull you over. The new law also now explicitly includes a stop if police notice a broken taillight without first engaging in a traffic violation. Under the new policy, a police officer can issue a speeding ticket - but not a ticket for a broken taillight. Under the old policy, police could still cite you for a broken taillight if they spotted a broken taillight without first seeing a traffic violation. Under the new policy, those stops would be limited to once per officer. The Police Department could still give a ticket for not wearing a seat belt or for other traffic violations. The new law, which took effect on Sept. 12, will also limit people to three citations for traffic offenses in one year. Previously, a person could be ticketed for three violations in a year. At a November town hall meeting, police Chief Cathy Lanier said the new policy puts more police resources into protecting motorists and ensuring the well-being of pedestrians. ___ Copyright 2018 The Associated Press. Non esiste una sintesi migliore di quello che è successo fra il 2012 e il 2013. Se non davvero ha ribadito alcuni dei punti fondamentali della sua politica industriale (crescita, occupazione, creare una normativa più efficiente), l'industria automobilistica ha altresì cercato di sintetizzare la sua strategia in un programma semplificato e chiaro. A cosa giustificava l'ingiustificabile intento di far passare una politica automobilistica soggettiva come imprescindibile della sua strategia. L'industria automobilistica ha avuto il coraggio di smettere di difendere la politica sulla CO2 e di dire agli altri paesi che
