Spiros Orlando / AFP/Getty Images Sattin, a resident of the tiny town of Manises in the eastern Cuban province of Oriente, said his small video camera captured some of the most intense storm footage ever recorded. "This is the strongest hurricane I have ever recorded," Sattin said. "It's the strongest I've ever heard." The Category 5 storms destroyed thousands of homes and killed at least 17 people in countries including Honduras, Haiti, the Dominican Republic, Cuba and the United States. Sattin said he bought his camera four months ago when the price fell from around $2,000 to less than $500. "I had no idea how strong they would be. I had no idea how big they would be," said Sattin, who now wants to sell the footage online to generate income. Sattin said strong winds ripped trees from the ground and that his footage showed the speed of the hurricane and the force of the storm. Slideshow ( 9 images ) "I think it's going to sell thousands of copies," he said. According to the National Hurricane Center in Miami, Hurricane Irma, which is now a Category 5 storm, was the strongest to ever make landfall in the United States. At least 19 people died from Irma in the Caribbean as it traversed the region, and a U.S. official said at least eight people were killed on its path through the Florida Keys. In Haiti, Prime Minister Jean-Charles Moise said at least 18 people were killed by Irma's outer bands. In the Bahamas, at least ten people died and dozens of homes were destroyed by Irma.Hit and Run It has been a challenging, snowy and humid winter, and while it was better than the previous one, our eyes are still glued to the TV hoping for a break in the weather.

More particularly, the embodiments relate to hydraulic fluids for use in process service applications where it is desired to provide improved operating life, increased sealability and longevity, low weight fluid and improved application ease to reduce the need for dedicated operator training for use of the fluid. Hydraulic fluids have a wide variety of uses, from controlling the operation of hydraulic pumps, to use in automatic vehicle transmissions, to generating high pressure for use in the medical field. Such applications require fluids having desirable physical properties for optimal performance under process conditions. For example, high pressure may be generated by an hydraulic pump in order to move a reciprocating member, such as a ram, in a hydraulic cylinder to displace an object, such as a press in order to form a part. The power level of the hydraulic pump is regulated by the operator, which in turn, controls the flow of hydraulic fluid through the hydraulic circuit and controls the movement of the ram. As hydraulic fluid is moved, air from the hydraulic fluid accumulates in the hydraulic circuit, causing a buildup in pressure. An accumulation of air can cause difficulties when a hydraulic pump is turned on, since air trapped in the hydraulic circuit may discharge to atmosphere, causing the pump to operate at a reduced efficiency and waste energy. Typically, the air in the hydraulic circuit is exhausted to atmosphere via a manual valve, which is operated by the operator. However, such manual valves often do not provide a constant system pressure, or they may operate at a flow rate that is too low to exhaust the air from the hydraulic circuit to prevent an unwanted buildup in pressure.I love the rain. I don't remember a time when I didn't. Nothing lasts forever. The roots of my life go deep, in every direction, but that much is clear. Every breath of rain I take is a reminder. It is when the leaves fall, when the fallen leaves crackle like laughter in the thick wet carpeting of October that I am filled with despair. I look at the sky, longing for a future that isn't per
