However, with layers and transparency, the program now supports all formats of images. Photoshop uses the bitmap format for most images, with some specialized graphics formats, such as PDF, JPG, GIF, and TIFF. Regardless of the type of image, there is a choice of whether the image is flattened or flattened with a layer mask. One advantage of flattening is that pixels or image data are saved in the image's file. Instead of having a separate file for each layer, which can slow down performance, the flattened image saves time.
