See below for official release details: Release Date: September 29, 2017 Platforms: PC (Windows PC), PlayStation 4, Xbox One FIFA 22 introduces HyperMotion Technology, which uses real-life player movement captured in motion capture suits to animate FIFA gameplay and create fluid animations, better replicating player movement in the real world. The feature consists of a series of high-precision animations created in Blender that are applied to players with positions tracked in the real world. These animations are employed during gameplay, allowing for players to move in ways realistic players would and react realistically during realistic interactions. The animations have been fully tested by the FIFA community and are based on the game's current code, technology and architecture. FIFA 22 will include more than 700 new player animations and over 2,000 minor animation improvements. Further Enhancements to Live Commentary FIFA 22 introduces a new in-match commentary system that uses voice acting and in-game audio to narrate your experience of the game's moments. "We've completely redesigned the broadcast commentary in FIFA. It's a much better experience, and you'll be hearing new ways of being immersed," said David Taylor, FIFA Lead Producer. "Our goal was to use that rich audio to really bring every emotion of a match to life. You can hear the real intensity in the roar of the crowd, the skill and emotions of the players, and the commentary team telling the story. We think you'll get a totally new appreciation of the matches." Developed by London-based Mixamo, the concept of the completely new broadcast commentary is that it acts as an extension of the gameplay experience in the stadium. Players and coaches will be heard using realistic voices from the player's perspective, narrating the key moments of the match and applying them to the surrounding circumstances. "Mixamo's mission is to create animations
