1997-1998. Workplace injury and illness cost Australian employers A$22 billion annually.
Ergonomics is a significant contributing factor to workplace injuries. This study was undertaken to determine current awareness of ergonomics in Australia. The study was conducted in 1997-1998. The overall response rate for the study was 34.7%. Results indicated that the current level of workplace ergonomics awareness in Australia is low. There is an urgent need for higher levels of awareness to be achieved.Use of a satellite phone. A satellite phone is an invaluable communications device for shipboard systems in situations where there are no other methods available. Since it is not as reliable as a landline phone, its use should be evaluated carefully and a contingency plan developed for its use. Our study found that, in spite of its limitations, such a phone has considerable value in situations where landlines are not available or reliable and is more useful than a shipboard radio when both are needed. We recommend that it be used as a backup to other communications equipment when considering the use of the satellite phone.
