Brushes and Pens are available in the following sections: Text To Path Align Median Blur Gradient & Pattern tool Liquify Photoshop Crop Tool Flood Fill Scratch Brush Contour Brush Mirror Brush Pointer Lasso Tool Magic Wand Pencil Tool Brush Tip Shape Drawing Tools Paths Multi-Resolution Tool Quick Selection Tool Layers

1. Brushes Brushes is an important tool in Photoshop. Use brushes for effects like drawing, painting, compositing, retouching, or creating special shapes and patterns. You can use the following tools to create new brushes: Direct Selection Lasso Gradient Scratch Pattern 3D Scatter Blend Brush Brush Tip Shapes Brush Tip Shape Open a Brush Tip Shape file. Choose a brush object in the Brushes palette and drag the brush to the canvas window. Notice that the brush shape moves with the mouse. To make a new brush shape, click and drag to see your selection. When the shape is created, click the preview window at the top to see what the new brush looks like. You can see the previewed brush in the Brushes palette. To edit the shape or its properties, double-click the brush in the Brushes palette. To delete a shape, double-click the brush in the Brushes palette and delete the shape.
2. Layers Use Layers to organize your images into different categories. Group your layers in different ways, and use the different tools to combine them into new images. The following are the most important kinds of layers: Fill Layer: The Fill Layer fills in the areas of an image that are not covered by the other layers. Layer Masks: A layer mask is a special type of layer used to protect or reveal part of a layer. Inverse Layer Masks: An Inverse Layer Mask covers up the areas of a layer that are covered by another layer. Layer Masks Use layer masks to protect areas of your work from the destructive effect of the P-key. To create a layer mask: Create a new layer in the image window and apply a black or white gradient. Activate the Layer Mask icon in the Layers palette to see a small black rectangle on the new layer's thumbnail.

What's New in the Photoshop 2022 ()?

More than 1.5 billion people live in coastal regions around the world ([@b1-ehp-117-797]). Estimations indicate that this is a substantial fraction of the global population ([@b2-ehp-117-797]). People living in the coastal region are exposed to a mixture of pollutants. These may be of natural origin, and they may also be of anthropogenic origin. For example, with regard to natural pollutants, coastal populations are exposed to potential endocrine-disrupting chemicals originating from various natural sources ([@b3-ehp-117-797]). Many of these pollutants also occur in biologically relevant concentrations in sewage, runoff water, and air in urban settings, which is a major source of additional exposure in the coastal regions. The major sources of anthropogenic pollutants in the coastal regions may also be of natural origin. These include both contamination from terrestrial runoff of agricultural and industrial processes, and contamination from marine sources such as drilling operations, shipping and port activities, and dredging. Other anthropogenic sources of contamination include exhaust emissions from motor vehicles, power plants, and incinerators. The coastal regions in many countries, including China, India, Italy, Japan, Portugal, Spain, Switzerland, and the United States, are heavily affected by the presence of large amounts of persistent organic pollutants, some of which, such as polychlorinated biphenyls (PCBs) and polychlorinated dibenzo-p-dioxins and dibenzofurans (PCDD/Fs), are classified as potentially carcinogenic to humans. Polychlorinated naphthalenes, one of the most commonly occurring chlorinated compounds in ambient air in the coastal regions, also have this potential for carcinogenicity. Exposure of people living in the coastal regions may occur through ingestion, inhalation, or dermal routes of exposure, with potential consequences for the development of respiratory disorders and cancers \[recent reviews ([@b4-ehp-117-797]; [@b14-ehp-117-797])\]. Because children are more susceptible than adults to the adverse effects of pollutants, it is important to investigate the health effects of pollutants in this population. In this issue of EHP, [@b7-ehp-117-797] compared the effects of exposure to pyrene and PCBs with those of lead in infants and children in the study site of Maisonneuve-Rosemont
