With the rapid growth of recreational activities in the wake of the increased leisure time which is now available to the population, especially to the younger generation, there has been an increased demand for water sport-related equipment, such as personal watercrafts (PWCs), jet skis, surf boards, kayaks, etc. While these products are invaluable to the population of persons who make use of them, these sports have also spawned a number of reckless and fatal accidents. For example, in recent years these types of accidents have occurred in waters like the Long Island Sound, North Carolina Sound, and western Washway (Washington). When a person falls into the water, if he or she does not have a device, such as a flotation device, such as a life jacket, which can help save his or her life, it is possible that the person may drown. As is well known, a PWC is a motorized vessel which is usually much smaller than those of a traditional boat and is commonly used in waters like the Sound. A PWC is not a boat in the sense that it is not designed to be maneuvered in a traditional boat fashion. A PWC is a water sport-related vehicle which, due to its relatively small size, is not usually equipped with flotation devices of the type discussed above, i.e., ones which are suitable for persons in the water. There is a need for such flotation devices. Accordingly, there is a need in the art for a PWC flotation device which is designed to be utilized by a person who has fallen into the water.
