of faith. More than what it says on the tin Maxwell's original title in Blunt's Historical Account was "A History of the Rise, Progress, Establishment, and Present State of the Romish Religion in Great Britain; with a particular View of It's Spread Among the English People, and particularly of its Use in the Colonies and the West Indies; and also of the Measures Thought Necessary to be Adopted for its Root, and Prevention of its further Progress." In his Preface, Blunt gave an example of a Protestant cleric preaching a sermon on his own lack of faith, because "no decent preacher will make a text of his own experience, neither will he practise his own worst enemy." He adds, "I hope the generality of my countrymen have not been so unwise, and that they have never made their own experience the text for any sermon, nor the sins of others the sum of their own." C. V. Wedgwood cites Blunt's work as "by far the best single-volume description" of the Roman Catholic Church in the United Kingdom, and he concludes that, "His work has been widely read and re-read, used and quoted by others, generally uncritically, so that without it it is impossible to understand the history of the Church of England or the struggle between Protestants and Catholics in the Church in the 17th century."
