140330, Windows Update (WSUS).Antihypertensive treatment modifies the relationship between impaired glucose metabolism and left ventricular mass and geometry in hypertensive patients. The aim of the study was to evaluate, in hypertensive patients, the effects of antihypertensive therapy on the relationship between impaired glucose metabolism, left ventricular (LV) mass and geometry. A cross-sectional study was conducted on patients referred for first diagnostic workup for essential hypertension. Insulin resistance was assessed with the homeostasis model assessment (HOMA), homeostasis model assessment insulin resistance (HOMA-IR), the quantitative insulin-sensitivity check index (QUICKI) and a hyperinsulinemic euglycemic clamp test (hyperinsulinemic-euuglycemic clamp test). The reference method was echocardiography; LV mass was indexed for body surface area. Patients were classified into quartiles according to HOMA, HOMA-IR, QUICKI and hyperinsulinemic-euglycemic clamp test insulin levels. A total of 402 hypertensive patients (63.2 ± 9.5 years) were enrolled (85% treated with 1-2 antihypertensive drugs). Compared with the lowest HOMA quartile, the highest HOMA quartile was significantly related with LV mass ($\beta 0.29 \pm 0.06$; $P = 0.002$) and with LV relative wall thickness ($\beta 0.17 \pm 0.05$; $P = 0.001$). The relationship between LV mass and HOMA-IR ($\beta 0.26 \pm 0.06$; $P = 0.002$) or QUICKI ($\beta 0.24 \pm 0.06$; $P = 0.001$) also remained significant. The percentage of patients with LV
