The webservice receives as parameter a date, and returns the latest year of that date, so my procedure must receive one date and return as parameter a second date. I'm using a DATE parameter because the next step, a conversion to a NUMBER, is performed and DATE is more accurate. The procedure receives correctly both the parameters. I have checked the syntax as it was the same with Oracle 11.2.0.1 and the problem began on 18. When I try to execute the procedure, I receive an error: d0c515b9f4

Although no problems were reported during the development stages, Microsoft was aware of the.dll file format and therefore decided to end the original.dll. This was in order to bring about a change in format to the.zip file format. To do this, the.dll files were encoded using the BINK video codec. This video codec has grown in use since its release, mainly due to the BinkPlayer, a video player that was designed to decode BINK.dll files. One of the main benefits of the BinkPlayer is that it can run on Windows 2000 and up. Video 1. Find Game Searches in Your Browser. Ubisoft Download Lab.. Binkw32.dll download Â . Binkw32.dll download Â .Q: What is this purple light zig-zag pattern on my plants? I was admiring my garden and noticed that there were lots of tiny little purple zig-zag patterns on the plants in the garden, and decided to take a look at them closer. I had just peeled back a little plastic base (about 1 inch square) from one of the plants, and realized that there were lots of little lines all around it, like this: What is this? Is it a sign of something undesirable? A: It looks like it may be a tiny little insect on a leaf. Can't think of any other name that would apply, and there are many varieties of small green or grey or yellowish colored creatures on leaves. There is a link from Google images to another site where it appears to be spider mite. I don't know if it will survive a year until it can pupate. The only way to get rid of it is by crushing the plant and tossing the leaves into the garbage. Edit: It's actually spider mite, not spider and mite, sorry. Looked like a bunch of little spiders to me. // Copyright (c).NET Foundation
