Former Chelsea defender Terry, now in charge of Aston Villa, enraged City supporters after a spectacular right-foot shot from Stephen Caulker was swept wide to hand the Blues a 2-1 win at St Andrew's. It was later described as an 'interference' as Caulker passed the ball out with his hand. But Redknapp has now come to the defender's defence, insisting: "It was from his foot. It was not an incident which was going to be punished. "I know he's got a bit of a history with this, but you can't come out with one free-kick and say that's an interference. "If you saw him in the previous game then you will have seen him with his hands up. "It's a wimbledon celebration. He doesn't have a direct opponent and he's hardly moved the ball. It was nothing. "I think the whole thing was ridiculous." Last night Terry refused to backtrack on his comments, insisting he was right to show his frustration at the City defeat. He added: "The hardest thing in the Premier League is to score against City. We knew City would score. "They scored with their first shot at goal but I've got a lot of respect for Joe Hart's goalkeeping and he made a good save, so I don't know what the fuss is. "I've got a lot of respect for Joe Hart and I think he's a cracking keeper. "It's not meant to cause any sort of disturbance, no disrespect to anyone, but I do stand my ground. "
