This is the most lifelike of gameplay ever seen in a video game, with players moving naturally through the pitch on dynamic tackles, making realistic, “awkward” plays, fending off opposition strikers, curling long shots with exquisite skill, and of course, making goal-scoring opportunities with individual touches and passes. This feature is on par with the reaction animations that were showcased in this gameplay demo, but on a far more detailed level. These motion capture data allow for incredible detail, with the minimalistic by-product of lighting and shadowing. The video above is a quick hands-on of "HyperMotion Technology", which we can see in action. Multiplayer appears to be the biggest draw to this new FIFA feature, as it allows for players to play against each other in one game (as normal) and then be able to see how they'd play against an opponent played by a motion capture player in their game. This is particularly interesting in this day and age of the internet and streaming, as this feature allows for player to play on the same field and still see how they'd play against a midweek opponent. The video below is a demonstration of how this multiplayer mode works. The gameplay above is from a real match, played by two players who have registered to play in this demo (Peter Suhren (Germany) and Ben Rolo (Sweden) The features include: 6v6 ultimate free-for-all gameplay Dynamic tackling Ultimate speed Team tactics on a 4v4 field Multiplayer head-to-head against players captured in motion Premier League, Bundesliga, French and Spanish football clubs You can read more on EA's blog about the demo below.
