Does bilateral contact lens wear increase tear film thickness? A pilot study. To investigate the hypothesis that bilateral rigid contact lens wear increases tear film thickness. Bilateral rigid soft contact lens wear was assessed in 15 participants. Tear breakup time (TBUT), Schirmer I test, and ocular surface staining were performed at baseline and after 1 week of wearing a non-adaptive rigid soft lens (MRCL). Tear volume was measured with the Ocular Surface Disease Index (OSDI). Left- and right-eye TBUT in each participant ranged from 5 to 9 seconds (mean \pm standard deviation [SD], 7.60 ± 1.43 seconds). Left- and right-eye Schirmer I test results ranged from 31 to 54 mm (mean, 41.15 ± 5.31 mm). Overall, ocular surface staining was less than or equal to mild in intensity. After week 1 of MRCL wear, left- and right-eye TBUT ranged from 3 to 10 seconds (mean, 5.93 ± 1.54 seconds), Schirmer I test results ranged from 32 to 57 mm (mean, 42.85 ± 3.91 mm), and ocular surface staining was mild or less. Tear volume ranged from 3.5 to 5.7 μ L (mean, 4.85 ± 0.53 μ L). One week of MRCL wear did not increase tear film thickness as measured by TBUT, Schirmer I test, and ocular surface staining. The MRCL is a practical, comfortable, and cost-effective solution for a mild to moderate increase in tear film thickness in healthy or nearsighted participants. I did with Turtle Lake Rodeo." At Phoenix Central Justin Johnson: "It was just a bunch of guys hooting and hollering. It was just a bunch of the sorority girls, and they were hooting and hollering and yelling and crying. It was really awesome." Emily Gilman: "I watched the boys barrel race and they got to the top of the barrel, but they weren't the last ones on the barrel. The other two in front of them didn't get down and they fell off the back end of the barrel, and they weren't very far up the track so they just scraped a little bit and then got back on the track and finished the race. It was really cool."
