Pregnancy and glioma. Patients with gliomas face many challenges during the course of their disease including the timing of radiotherapy, alterations in psychological state, and the development of secondary neurologic symptoms. Despite these challenges, a pregnancy can be beneficial for the mother and the fetus. During pregnancy, gliomas do not appear to affect the mother's prognosis, but treatment modalities have to be modified. Pregnancy is not contraindicated for treatment and a greater latitude in treatment can be taken. The studies discussed here show that women with gliomas should have the option of safe pregnancy for the benefit of the mother and the fetus.

Q: Rails validates presence of a field from a different model I have 3 models, A, B and C with relationships defined as A has many B's and B has many C's. I have a Rails form that accepts data from A, and I need to validate the presence of a field, x, from model B. The field x is not required (A keeps a log of what has been done on a system). What is the easiest way for me to validate the presence of a field on a model whose presence is determined by the presence of fields on a different model (in my case, the presence of B, determined by the presence of C). If I validate the presence of a field called 'x' on model B and leave the field 'x' undefined on model A, the form will successfully render and the data is saved as expected. But if I do it the other way around, the form is not rendered, and I get an empty model for A, despite the data being valid in that it contains an x field from B (and C). A: Let's say that the validation is like this (assuming that the model B is named Thumbs): class Thumbs Neurofibromatosis-1 (NF1) is an autosomal dominant disease affecting 1 in 2,500 individuals. The primary symptoms of neurofibromatosis-1 include skin lesions (café-au-lait spots, neurofibromas, and axillary freckling), Lisch nodules in the iris, bony changes (fibrous dysplasia of bone, plexiform neurofibroma of the optic pathway), and internal tumors (neurofibrom
